A REVIEW OF THE SERVICE OF THE REGIMENT FIFTY YEARS

JAMES M. HUDNUT
Late Quartermaster Sergeant of Company D.
NEW YORK, 1913

Colonel PETER A. PORTER

Killed while leading the Regiment in the assault at Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864

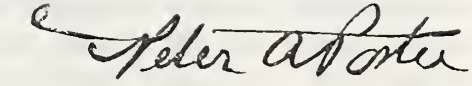
INTRODUCTION

By Hon. Peter A. Porter, son of Colonel Peter A. Porter

A complete list of the casualties in the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, by battles and by names, will go far toward supplying a history of the Regiment. Such a publication, made up from the Official Records, will be accepted as authoritative and as a measure of the service rendered by the Regiment. These long lists of killed, wounded and captured show at what terrible risk and cost the Regiment did its duty, not only at such great battles as Cold Harbor, but also upon other fields which have almost escaped the historian's pen. My father lost his life in the first great battle in which the Regiment was engaged, and so his service must always be in large part that rendered in recruiting it and in commanding it during the period of its preparation for the field. I love to think that the discipline and courage which carried it through so many fiery trials was in part the infusion of his own spirit into the hearts of those who so gallantly followed him into the jaws of death on the morning of June 3, 1864. They were brave followers of a brave leader, and their descendants, as well as his, may well be proud of the record of the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery. The personal friendship and the devotion which the "Boys of the Old Eighth" felt and proved for their first Colonel, and the kindly feelings which, on his father's account, they have all ever since extended to "The Colonel's Boy",—are to me priceless heritages, which no mere words can ever express and which no lapse of time shall ever efface.



PREFATORY NOTE

THE Eighth New York Heavy Artillery was originally the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Infantry. It was raised in the counties of Niagara, Orleans and Genesee, and was mustered in the United States service at Lockport, N. Y., on August 22, 1862. It left Lockport the next day and arrived in Baltimore on the 25th; did garrison duty in and about Baltimore until May, 1864, being changed to Heavy Artillery in December, 1862. During the first fall and winter it was stationed at Fort Federal Hill; on April 30, 1863, was ordered to Fort McHenry. Late in June companies C and F were sent to Maryland Heights, and the remaining companies followed on July 10th. The Regiment put the Heights in a state of defense and was there when the Confederate Army crossed the Potomac on its return from Gettysburg.

Returning to Baltimore on July 31st the Regiment was scattered among the defenses of the city. During the following winter companies L and M were added and the Regiment was recruited to the maximum strength of an artillery regiment—twelve companies of 150 men each. On May 15, 1864, it left Baltimore for the Army of the Potomac. Here it became for a short time a part of General Tyler's Heavy Artillery Division attached to the Second Corps. Late in May, this Division was broken up and the Regiment was assigned to the Second Brigade (General Tyler), Second Division (General Gibbon), Second Corps (General Hancock). It remained with these organizations and shared their experiences until the close of the war. The best book on the subject is Walker's History of the Second Army Corps.

After Lee's surrender the Regiment took part in the Grand Review in Washington, May 22-23. On June 5th, 310 of the original members of the Regiment and 139 who joined later were mustered out at Munson's Hill, Va. The two new companies and others, numbering in all 503, were transferred to the 10th Infantry and the 4th Artillery, and served a few months longer. Our service in the field was almost entirely as infantry.

The Report of the Adjutant-General of the State for 1897 contains "Registers of the Seventh and Eighth Artillery". Through the kindness of comrade L. D. Le Van, I obtained a copy of the book and attempted to make up a statement of the losses of the Regiment, but found great difficulty in doing so. The Register purports to contain the name, age, dates of enlistment and muster, company, and a record of promotions, injuries received and method of leaving the service,—of every member of the Regiment. But many of the records as first published were incomplete, some were incorrect and some were contradictory. I finally determined to make up a record of casualties by battles and by names, so that errors could be more easily found and corrected.

In order to account for each member of the Regiment, I first gave each man a number, and then drew off on sheets containing fifty lines each the record of each man with respect to casualties and manner of leaving the service. For the doubtful cases I adopted the following rules:

1. Missing in action, no further record—as killed.

2. Reported wounded, no further record—as died of wounds.

3. Captured, no further record—as died of disease.

4. Where date and place of casualty do not correspond—the place named to be assumed as correct.

5. Died of wounds soon after June 3d, no date or place given—as wounded at Cold Harbor.

I have obtained from comrades and from the records of the Adjutant-General's Office additional information with respect to about twenty names falling under these rules, and find they gave a correct result in every case but one. I recently spent the better part of two days with comrade Le Van, searching the records of the Adjutant-General's Office. We were able to dispose of all casualties without date or place except 26. I have since obtained information from the Adjutant-General's Office in Washington which reduces this number to 7. These will be found at the end of the battle lists.

The total number of names on the Register of the 8th Artillery is 2,954. But of these 421 were never assigned to any company and never did any duty with the Regiment; 84 really belonged to other organizations and were printed here by mistake. These 421 names are disposed of in the Register, as since revised, as follows:

Belonging to other organizations	84
Assigned to other organizations	44
Discharged for disability	27
Deserted	73
Mustered out	5
Died	9
No further record	179

Other non-effectives were as follows:

Not mustered in	5
No record after muster	36
Total non-effectives	462

The total effective enrollment was therefore 2,492, and these are accounted for as follows:

Killed in battle	207
Died of wounds	150	357
Accidental deaths	12
Shot by prison guard	2	14
Died of disease		277
Total deaths			648
Discharged for disability			304
Transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps			96
Transferred to other organizations			503
Mustered out June 5, 1865			448
Mustered out other dates			300
Deserted			130
Resigned			15
Discharged for promotion in other organizations			14
Discharged to enlist in regular army			10
Discharged to enlist in the navy			4
In hospital at muster-out			11
Returned prisoners absent at muster-out			4
Dismissed and dishonorably discharged			3
On detached duty at muster-out			1
Prisoner joined Confederate Army			1
Total			2,492

To the statement of casualties in each battle I have added a summary of the memoranda respecting the fate of the wounded (not mortally) and of prisoners. Consolidating these summaries gives the following:

Wounded not mortally—514.

Captured—disposed of under prisoners	11
Recovered and captured subsequently	13
Recovered and killed subsequently	1
Recovered and wounded subsequently	8
Recovered and died of disease	8
Recovered resigned	2
Discharged for disability	137
Transferred to Veteran Reserve Corps	51
Transferred to 10th N. Y. Infantry	84
Transferred to 4th N. Y. Artillery	29
Transferred to 25th Battery	1
Mustered out with the Regiment	93
Mustered out—other times and places	62
In hospital at muster-out	9
Deserted from hospital	5
Total	514

In a similar manner I have made summaries showing the fate of prisoners, and these being consolidated give the following:

Prisoners—271.

Died of wounds	9
Died of disease	138
Shot by prison guard	2
Joined Confederate Army	1
At Camp Distribution at muster-out	1
Paroled—no further record	1
Returned—no further record	1
Returned—discharged for disability	5
Returned—transferred to Vet. Reserve Corps.	1
Returned—transferred to 10th Infantry	23
Returned—transferred to 4th Artillery	10

Returned—mustered out with Regiment.....	23
Returned—mustered out other places.....	53
Returned—resigned	1
Returned—deserted	1
Returned—absent sick at muster-out.....	1
Total.....	271

The records are frequently incomplete as to the place of death from wounds or the place of discharge by reason of wounds, but they are sufficiently full to show that the wave of suffering set in motion in Virginia rolled far and broke in many places. They show deaths in Field and Corps Hospitals, at White House, at City Point, on steamer en route, at Alexandria, Washington, Georgetown, Baltimore, Annapolis, Philadelphia, Elmira, Rochester, Buffalo, Albany, New York City, Hartford, Providence, and Portsmouth Grove, R. I., Chester, Pa., Newark and Beverly, N. J. Nine wounded died while prisoners of war; seven died at home.

The record of deaths of Prisoners from disease is equally pathetic, and includes deaths on flag of truce boat, at Camp Parole, at Baltimore and at home. A few years ago I was permitted to examine the diary of Sergeant John Travis of Co. D, who died a prisoner in Salisbury, N. C. The diary was returned to his friends by a Confederate who was a Masonic brother. It contains an entry for every day of the year 1864, and supplies much information respecting the fate of comrades. In December there is a record of personal illness, and at the end is written in another hand—"John Travis died January 4, 1865."

While I have not included the names of unassigned Recruits, who never did any service with the Regiment, in the enrollment, I have given in a separate list the names of such as died of disease. These men fell sick and died while awaiting assignment, and they deserve a place on the Honor Roll of those who gave their lives to preserve the Union.

HEADQUARTERS FORT FEDERAL HILL, IN 1862

The officers are—from the left—Major James M. Willett, Adjutant Edwin L. Blake, Colonel Peter A. Porter, Surgeon James M. Leet, Lieutenant-Colonel Willard W. Bates, all of the 8th N. Y. Heavy Artillery, and Captain Kendricks, Instructor. The civilian to the left is Hon. Henry Winter Davis, A mber of Congress from Baltimore

Wishing to know how the original members of the 129th Infantry fared during their longer service, I have made a separate tabulation of them with the following result:

Total Enrollment—1,003.

Killed in battle	100
Died of wounds	59
Died of disease, accidents, etc	112
Transferred and resigned	33
Dismissed	2
Discharged for disability	159
Deserted	54
Transferred to V. R. C	54
Mustered out June 5, 1865	310
Mustered out other times	120
	1,003
There were also, wounded not mortally	213
Prisoners (of whom 44 died)	101

Casualties have been arranged for the most part in the order of time as follows:

At Spottsylvania Court House, May 19, 1864.

At the North Anna River and Totopotomoy Creek, May 22d to June 1, 1864.

At Cold Harbor, June 2 to June 12, 1864.

At Petersburg, June 16-18, 1864.

At Petersburg (Weldon Railroad), June 22-25, 1864.

At Deep Bottom, August 15-16, 1864.

At Ream's Station, August 25, 1864.

At Hatcher's Run (Boydton Road), Oct. 27, 1864.
At Armstrong's Mill (2d Hatcher's Run), Feb. 5-8,'65.
During Siege of Petersb'g, July 1, 1864—Mar. 1, 1865.
During Appomattox Campaign, April 1-9, 1865.
Casualties in Battle, Date and Place unknown.
Miscellaneous casualties.
Died of Disease.

The object of this publication is to place within reach of the many records which are now accessible to but few, and to show, at a glance, the losses of the Regiment just as they occurred. This I hope may serve to clear up and correct the discrepancies in former accounts. For example, "Fox's Regimental History of the Civil War" gives our losses at Cold Harbor as 80 killed, 339 wounded and 86 missing, total 505. These lists show 125 killed, 349 wounded (94 of whom died) and 28 prisoners 11 of whom were wounded. Some of his other figures do not agree with mine—but here are the names as they appear in the record, and what a record of steadfastness, of devotion to duty and of suffering it is! These lists of killed, wounded, captured and died of disease constitute a monument more enduring than brass to the heroic service rendered by the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery in the great struggle to maintain the integrity of the Union.

Note.—Deep Bottom is at the mouth of Bailey's Creek—where it enters the James River, opposite the northern end of Jones' Neck. This neck is on the right bank and is made by a long loop of the James, which then makes a wider loop inclosing on the left bank Strawberry Plains. Fussell's Mill is on Bailey's Creek about four miles from its mouth. Two actions were fought near Deep Bottom, the first on July 27-29, 1864, the second on August 14-17. The Regiment took part in both, but suffered casualties only in the second. In the "Official Army Register" the first is known as "Strawberry Plains", the second as "Deep Bottom".

He lives in fame that dies in virtue's cause.

Shakespeare: Titus Adronicus, Act 1. Sc. 1.

If you would see the monument of those who died to save the Union, look around you upon the Union as it is.

FIFTY YEARS AFTER MUSTER-IN

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O UNION strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast and sail and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope!
Fear not each sudden sound and shock,
'Tis of the wave and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee,—are all with thee!

Longfellow: The Building of the Ship.

FIFTY YEARS AFTER MUSTER-IN.

AN ADDRESS PREPARED FOR THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MUSTER-IN OF THE 129TH NEW YORK INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS, AFTERWARDS THE 8TH NEW YORK HEAVY ARTILLERY.

BY JAMES M. HUDNUT,
Late Quartermaster Sergeant of Company D.

[The Regiment was mustered into the United States service at Lockport, New York, on August 22, 1862; fiftieth anniversary held at Albion, N. Y., August 22, 1912.]

FIFTY years after the battle of Bunker Hill the corner-stone of the monument that now marks the spot was laid with imposing ceremonies. There were present on that occasion over 200 veterans of the Revolutionary War, about 40 of whom had been participants in that battle. Some of you will remember that when we were school-boys we used to declaim a part of the oration delivered by Daniel Webster on that occasion. Greeting the veterans before him, he said:

"Venerable men! You have come down to us from a former generation. Heaven has bounteously lengthened out your lives that you might behold this joyous day."

I am sure every veteran before me to-day responds to that sentiment. We, too, have come down from a former generation, and our lives have been lengthened out beyond those of most of our contemporaries that we might behold this joyous day.

The veterans of the Revolution could look back with pride upon their toils and sacrifices—which made their country free and independent; the veterans of the Civil War may fairly claim to have completed the work which the Revolutionary heroes begun, and to have made it the law of the land—not merely an empty declaration—that "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" are among the "inalienable rights" of man.

Looking back upon the events of fifty years ago we can say confidently that our cause was just; we can say proudly that we made a good fight; we can say gladly and gratefully that our cause was triumphant while we were still in the ranks—that we were allowed to inscribe upon our colors the last word of the war—"Appomattox."

It was a peculiar war—it was not waged against a foreign nation; it was not waged to gratify personal ambition; it was waged to uphold the principle that underlies all free government—the principle that disputes between different sections of the country shall be settled by constitutional and lawful methods. Our fathers had formed a Federal Union in which much had been conceded to the autonomy and local sovereignty of the individual states; but they had, at the same time, established one sovereign authority—the Union; they had established one supreme law—the Constitution. During a period of over seventy years following the adoption of the Constitution the people of the United States had stood before the world as one people; they had waged war with other nations; they had added to the national domain by purchase, by conquest, and by discovery and occupation, an area greater than that originaly possessed, and the number of states had increased from thirteen to thirty-three. But, in 1860, the election of a President by a political party pledged, on the one hand, not to interfere with slavery in the States where it then existed, and, on the other, not to admit any more slave states to the Union,—was made the occasion of an attempt on the part of eleven states to withdraw from the Union and to set up an independent government. That attempt was accompanied by the attempt to take possession of all United States property within the limits of the seceded states. In the progress of these operations the national flag was fired upon, and open war was begun against the authority and forces of the United States.

Looking back upon these events from the distance of half a century—after the passions of war have cooled and after we have considered in calmer moods the plea for the right of secession,— it seems to be the judgment of impartial history that, if such right originally existed, no provision was made for its exercise, and the President was required to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution"; that, if such right originally existed, it had fairly lapsed with the progress of time and with the growth and development of the nation; that, if such right originally existed, no adequate reason was shown for its exercise by force of arms in 1861.

I have dwelt upon the Union as the primary object of the war, because in the careless writing, and the still more careless reading, of history it is often assumed that, because slavery was the proximate cause of the conflict, and because the war resulted in the abolishment of slavery,—the war was waged against slavery. This is a mistake. The war was begun solely for the preservation of the Union, and up to the time of our enlistment no official action had been taken looking to the abolition of slavery. Indeed, on the very day of our muster-in, President Lincoln addressed his famous "open letter" to Horace Greeley, in which he said, "My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or to destroy slavery. * * * What I do about slavery and the colored race, I do because I believe it helps to save the Union, and what I forbear, I forbear because I do not believe it would help to save the Union. I shall do less whenever I shall believe what I am doing hurts the cause, and I shall do more whenever I shall believe doing more will help the cause." It was not until a month later that the preliminary proclamation of emancipation was issued, and not until four months later that the final edict went forth that linked the freedom of the slave with the preservation of the Union. The proclamation of emancipation was as much a war measure as was the blockade of Southern ports, and it was made to secure the more hearty co-operation of anti-slavery men in the prosecution of the war and to throw the weight of the slaves, as an industrial and military force, into the scale of battle. When the victory over the seceding states was complete, the adoption of the Constitutional amendment abolishing slavery was made a condition, on their part, of the resumption of normal relations to the Union.

But why should the preservation of the Federal Union have been considered of such supreme importance? The case was briefly stated by Mr. Lincoln in his first Inaugural Address. "Physically speaking", he said, "we cannot separate. We cannot remove our respective sections from each other, nor build an impassable wall between them. * * * They cannot but remain face to face, and intercourse, either amicable or hostile, must continue between them. Is it possible, then, to make that intercourse more advantageous or more satisfactory, after separation than before? Can aliens make treaties easier than friends can make laws? Can treaties be more faithfully enforced between aliens than laws can among friends? Suppose you go to war, you cannot fight always; and when, after much loss on both sides and no gain on either, you cease fighting, the identical questions as to terms of intercourse are again upon you." The country had already had a sad experience under the Articles of Confederation prior to the adoption of the Constitution, an experience which it did not wish to repeat. The Union "had its origin", as Webster said in his Reply to Hayne, "in the necessities of disordered finance, prostrate commerce and ruined credit."

The two questions which had caused most contention within the Union were the tariff and slavery. What would have been the outlook for peace on these subjects along a boundary line fifteen hundred miles in extent? In 1803 the United States was ready to go to war with either France or Spain over the right to the free navigation of the Mississippi River; what would have been the outlook for peace with a large part of that river—including its mouth—the whole Gulf coast and a large part of the Atlantic coast in the hands of a foreign power? If any state could withdraw from the Union at will, who would pay the obligations of the Union, and what would become of the territories which were the common property of the whole people? In short, if the principle of secession were once admitted we would have had in government the "organized and carefully barricaded impotency" of the Confederation of 1781, and in business the "disordered finance, prostrate commerce and ruined credit" from which the country was saved by the adoption of the Constitution.

But there was still another reason for defending the Union—a reason that underlies not only the Government under the Constitution, but which underlies the whole system of government as practiced by the English-speaking race. The philosophical historian, John Fiske, finds that there have been three methods of nation making. First, the Oriental method—of conquest without incorporation of the conquered peoples, without admitting them to a share in the political life of the conquering nation,—a system under which conquered peoples become the slaves of despots. The second is the Roman method—of conquest with incorporation, but without representation. Under this method the great Roman Empire was built up until half the world owned its sway and the conquered peoples became Roman citizens. But it was governed by the "Senate and People of Rome", the colonies were not represented, and so liberty was lost at the outset, and ultimately the empire itself crumbled to pieces. The third method does not necessarily involve conquest at all, but is a federation of semi-independent states for purposes of common defense and commercial intercourse, the states controlling their own local affairs, and the people carrying on the government both of the individual states and of the Federation through duly elected representatives. Under this system a strong government may be established and liberty preserved. The function of the Federal government is to defend the federation against aggression from without and to keep the peace within; and under the government of the Federal Union two wars had been fought with foreign nations, and peace had been maintained among the States for seventy years throughout a territory nearly as large as that of all Europe. After a review of the principles and of the history of federal government, Prof. Fiske declares that in "the pacific implications of federalism" lies the best hope for the future peace of the world.

"And now," he says, "we may begin to see distinctly what it was that the American government fought for in the late civil war. * * * We used to hear it often said, while that war was going on, that we were fighting not so much for the emancipation of the negro as for the maintenance of our federal union; * * * and to many this seemed like taking a low and unrighteous view of the case. Nevertheless, from the standpoint of universal history, this was the correct and proper view. The emancipation of the negro, as an incidental result of the struggle, was a priceless gain; * * * but deeper down than this question, far more subtly interwoven with the innermost fibres of our national well-being, * * * was the question whether this great pacific principle of union joined with independence should be overthrown by the first deep-seated social difficulty it had to encounter, or should stand as an example of priceless value to other ages and to other lands. * * * There have been many useless wars, but this was not one of them, for, more than most wars that have been, it was fought in the direct interest of peace, and the victory so dearly purchased and so humanely used was an earnest of future peace and happiness for the world." (American Political Ideals, page 135.)

It was because Mr. Lincoln appreciated the value of the Union that he said in his message to Congress in December, 1862; "we shall nobly save or meanly lose the last, best hope of earth."

To have borne a worthy part in such a struggle is the high honor that fell to members of our regiment. When General Sheridan was campaigning in the Shenandoah valley he was dissatisfied with General Averell because he withdrew from the enemy's front on account of an unconfirmed report that "a brigade or division" of the enemy was turning his flank. Sheridan sent him a dispatch, saying, "I don't want you to let the enemy bluff you or your command. * * * I do not advise rashness, but I do desire resolution and actual fighting, with necessary casualties, before you retire."

Judged by the test of losses in battle our regiment stands high on the roll of fame; it stands number forty in a list of over two thousand regiments, in the percentage of killed and mortally wounded to total enrollment; it stands second on the list in the number of killed and wounded in a single battle—being exceeded in this respect only by the 1st Maine Heavy Artillery, which fought with us at Spottsylvania Court House and at Petersburg, where its heaviest losses were incurred.

We left Lockport one thousand strong; we received a few recruits prior to December, 1863, when we were made a full artillery regiment with 1,800 men. The report of the Adjutant-General of the State, for 1897, in its revised form shows a total effective enrollment of 2,492 of the Eighth Heavy Artillery.

The total deaths were 648, or 26% of the total effective enrollment, and of this number 357 (over 14%) died from wounds received in battle. In addition to those mortally wounded, 514 were wounded not mortally, 271 were taken prisoners, — of whom 9 died of wounds, 138 of disease, and 2 were shot by Confederate guards. The total number killed, wounded and captured in battle was 1,139, of which number 22 were both wounded and captured. The heaviest loss was sustained at Cold Harbor —where there were 219 killed and mortally wounded, 255 other wounded and 28 captured, including 11 wounded, 5 of whom died of wounds. Most of these losses were incurred in the assault on the morning of June 3, 1864, the remainder between June 2 and June 12.

Severe losses were also sustained at Petersburg, June 16-18, 1864; at the Weldon Railroad on June 22-25; at Ream's Station, August 25; at the Boydton Road (or Hatcher's Run), October 27; and during the siege of Petersburg. The regiment participated in nine battles, and was present at four others, including Appomattox. In the 86 days following June 1, 1864, its losses in killed, wounded and captured were over 1,000 men, including among the killed and mortally wounded, Colonel Porter, Lieutenant-Colonel Bates, Major Blake, and thirteen other commissioned officers.

After our first battle (May 19, 1864) our divisions— which was at that time composed of heavy artillery regiments then under fire for the first time — was specially commended by General Meade for "good conduct", and for "the gallant manner" in which our command "met and repulsed the persistent attacks" of the enemy. After the battle of Ream's Station — where the regiment lost its colors — we were deprived of the privilege of carrying colors until we retrieved our reputation. This was done at the battle of Boydton Road or Hatcher's Run, after which the privilege of carrying colors was restored. Brigadier General Eagan, temporarily commanding our division at this battle, commended "all parts of his command without exception" for "their unexcelled discipline and gallantry" and for their "heroic steadiness", when "entirely surrounded by a vastly superior force". This commendation was sent to the Governor of the State and elicited from him a letter addressed to Colonel Willett expressing his gratification, and tendering his thanks to the officers and men of the regiment.

In Thackeray's "Chronicle of the Drum" he puts this sentiment into the mouth of a veteran drummer who confesses that on one occasion his command met with defeat:

> "Cheer up! 'tis no use to be glum, boys,
> 'Tis written since fighting begun,
> That sometimes we fight and we conquer,
> And sometimes we fight and we run."

The fact was — at Ream's Station, the blundering of those higher up placed the regiment in a position where those who did not run were taken prisoners. Those of our regiment who ran away at Ream's Station lived to fight again, but of those who were taken prisoners over one-half died during their imprisonment, and comparatively few ever returned to the ranks to fight again.

It only remains to say a few words respecting the triumph of the cause in which we embarked fifty years ago to-day. It was not like a foreign war which, after continuing for a time, is settled by negotiation. Several attempts were made to settle it by negotiation, but the North always insisted upon the Union, and the South always insisted upon independence. After the failure of the Hampton Roads Conference in January, 1865, an attempt was made to bring Generals Grant and Lee together for conference. When Grant asked for instructions, President Lincoln directed that he should have no conference with General Lee except for the capitulation of Lee's army or some other purely military matter, and that he should press to the utmost his military advantages. When Grant asked the surrender of Lee's army on the ground that further resistance was hopeless, General Lee replied that he did not think the emergency had arisen that called for the surrender of his army; it was only when Grant refused to meet him for any other purpose, and when General Gordon reported that his "command had been fought to a frazzle", and could do no more unless heavily supported by Longstreet — who had all he could do to hold his own lines — that General Lee finally consented to meet General Grant for the surrender of his army.

I mention this to emphasize the fact that the Confederates fought as long as there was any possible chance of success. They only surrendered when further resistance was useless and hopeless. They were of the same blood and training as ourselves; they fought with unsurpassed courage and gallantry; and when they surrendered they abandoned absolutely their contention for secession, and accepted the freedom of the slaves as a legitimate result of the war. They not only swore allegiance to the Union anew, but with the lapse of time they have seen and acknowledged that the attempt to disrupt the Union was unwise, and its failure a blessing in disguise. General E. P. Alexander, Chief of Artillery to General Longstreet, wrote a few years before his death: "It may now be clearly seen that the prize for which the South contended so strenuously would have proven but a calamity had she won it. There would have been in the country a condition of unstable equilibrium, with many centers of disturbance, which would surely have involved further division and probably further wars. * * * Were the right peaceably to secede, for which the South cheerfully endured all the bitterness of war, now tendered her as a free gift, every state would unanimously reject it with a curse." (Encyclopedia Americana, Article "Confederate States.")

In the Spring of 1900, the Society of the Army of the Potomac held its annual reunion in the City of Fredericksburg, Va. The address of welcome was made by one of its most prominent citizens, a former Confederate soldier. President McKinley, General Miles, General Wheeler and other Confederate officers, spoke from the same platform, and all rejoiced in the outcome of the conflict that had forever established "an indissoluble Union of indestructible states." It was the first time I had been in Fredericksburg since that memorable 17th of May, 1864, when we marched through the city on the way to our baptism of fire at Spottsylvania Court House. As I listened to these men speaking the praises of the Union, I thought—This was what we fought for—not to conquer any body, nor to deny to any body the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." This was what Mr. Lincoln saw with prophetic eye when he said in his first Inaugural: "We are not enemies but friends; we must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle-field and patriot grave to every living heart and hearth-stone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when touched, as they surely will be by the better angels of our nature." That is the music that fills the land to-day, and in it we have a recompense for all the hardships of war. It is a Confederate poet who sings:

> "Fold up the banners! Smelt the guns!
> Love rules. Her gentler purpose runs.
> A mighty mother turns in tears
> The pages of her battle years,
> Lamenting all her fallen sons."

Since the last gun was fired in the civil war a new generation has grown up, and the men who preserved the Union at such a cost of blood and treasure are fast passing off the stage of life. The new generation will never know the darkness of the night we passed through — the sufferings from hunger and thirst, from heat and cold, from weariness, from wounds, from the loss of comrades, from deprivation of all the common blessings of life. General Sherman summed up the horrors of war in a single word — the most awful in the language: "War", he said, "is hell;" and the generation to which we belonged had four years of it. And as we go on our "unreturning way", we commit to the keeping of the new generation that priceless inheritance — the Union and the Constitution — that system of government under which has been built up a strong national authority without destroying the liberty of the individual citizen, and which leaves each state free to manage its own local affairs. Our hope is that they will appreciate its value, that they will cherish and protect it and see to it that "government of the people, by the people, for the people" does "not perish from the earth."
